

LOS ANGELES DAILY TIMES
(COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.)By YARNELL, CASTLE, MATHEWS & OTIS.
Office No. 9 Temple Street.

NOTICE.

The Los Angeles Daily Times will be sold on all the trains of the Southern and Central Pacific Railroads; also on the Atlantic, Pacific & Santa Fe, and Texas & Pacific roads.

The Times can also be found at the news-stands of the Palace and Occidental Hotels and at the House of Representatives.

The Times office is connected with the telephone system of this city, and those desiring to advertise in or subscribe for this paper can do so by this means.

$10 REWARD

The proprietors of the Times will pay a reward of $10 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of any person stealing the Times from the doors of its subscribers.

To Correspondents.

The writers' names and address must in all cases accompany communications, where either publication or personal is desired. Unless so verified they receive no attention.

The most widely-circulated Daily Paper in Southern California is the Los Angeles Times.

MANUFACTURES.

That no country ever grew rich by agriculture alone is, we think, a sound proposition. Manufactures are needed, also. It is through the solidarity of its industries that a nation prospers. Examples of the benefits which manufactures are working to the States of the South, for instance, are numerous. Here is one of the most striking: "Eleven years ago a number of Northern capitalists staked out a town in Alabama, and called it Birmingham. To-day the town has 10,000 inhabitants, and is drawing new residents at the rate of 5000 a year." In the town and its immediate vicinity, 7000 persons are employed in coal mines and iron-works. We commend this strong bit of information to the business men of Los Angeles. It is a good thing to load up their pipes with that they may smoke and ponder. True, we have here no coal or iron foundation upon which to build grand superstructures; but the field for manufactures is by no means a barren one. California has grown within a very few years from a purely pastoral, agricultural and mining State into a community where manufactures now make a very respectable showing as compared with the manufactured products of other States of the Union. The southern country, from the nature of things, been "backward in coming forward" as a manufacturing section, but we in Los Angeles have made some progress, and there is abundant means and opportunity here for making a great deal more. The metropolis of Southern California must keep up her end of the beam in this as in all other matters which go to affect the future material greatness of half the State.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

A most trenchant, severe, scathing review of the political character of the late Alexander H. Stephens is that reprinted from the Denver Tribune in another part of to-day's Times. It is customary to speak well of the dead; and the Times, in common with the great majority of the press of the Union, of nearly all shades of political opinion, has endeavored to find something good to say of the dead Georgian, and has passed lightly over the great political sin of his life—his adherence to the enemies of his country in her desperate life and death struggle. We did this, not because we had forgotten his great crime, or altered our opinion of its enormity, or renewed our faith in the patriotism of the man who deliberately sinned with light; but we preferred the more grateful task of dwelling upon the better traits and the true deeds of the departed. We have no relish for "bouncing" a man in his coffin.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Yet we are not prepared to say that the review of our Colorado contemporary, severe as it is, passes the bounds of just criticism in its essential parts. It does not belie history nor distort facts. It measures Mr. Stephens' political character by a rigid standard, but none too rigid, considering the education, the training, the lights and the surroundings of the man. Stephens was not, as Jefferson Davis was, a man who had all his life, up to the inauguration of the rebellion, belonged to the Calhoun school of Southern politicians, whose disciples believed, or professed to believe, in the "constitutional" right of secession and nullification. Hence the greater enormity of his offense when he deliberately set about the malign work of attempting the destruction of his country. It is his own acts that can be brought up in judgment against Mr. Stephens with most telling effect. The judgment of history cannot be set aside in his case. It must stand; and it is this judgment which is the great obstacle in the way of the biographer when he approaches the task of portraying in eulogistic terms the public acts and political character of the late Vice-President of the defunct Southern Confederacy.

A more moderate and less thorough criticism of the dead Georgian, called out by the announcement of his death, was published by Mr. Stephens in the course of his political career he "seemed very often on the point of becoming great through adherence to a great and sound conviction in the face of overwhelming opposition; but he always failed. He stood many times as a dike against rushing water, but he always gave way. The strength of his moral nature was just below the safety point of resistance to the strain upon it. He disappointed and vexed the Secessionists quite as bitterly as he did the Unionists, because of his incapacity to embrace a cause with his whole heart. Need it be said that the greatest misfortune of statesmen comes upon them when such men as Mr. Stephens are set to guard against dangers from without and within? He knew his weakness as well as others, but he called it obedience to the will of the majority."

This is the point exactly. It was this spirit and this weakness that made Mr. Stephens say in his speech against secession, delivered before the Legislature of Georgia on the 14th of November, 1860—before any State had seceded—out of the Union, I speak for one, though my views might not agree with them, whatever the result may be, I shall bow to the will of her people. Their cause is my cause, and their destiny is my destiny; and I trust this will be the ultimate course of all. The greatest curse that can befall a free people is civil war."

Thus, in a speech against secession, he surrendered his Union principles in advance, giving notice that he held himself ready to fall if sufficiently tempted.

He was tempted, and before one hundred days had passed he had accepted the second place in the government of the rebel confederacy.

The first blow straight from the shoulder at Ben Butler's aspirations for the Presidency came from the Richmond Dispatch, which says: "In the name of reason why should the Democrats, now that they have so fine a prospect of success, go outside of their own party to take up such a character as Butler?" This indicates an unmistakable nervousness lest the Democratic party should commit one of its quadrennial blunders in 1884. It will do it if there is half a chance.

The Public, after a careful analysis of the new tariff bill, reaches the conclusion that it will effect a reduction in duties of $37,000,000 a year, and cut off more than $40,000,000 of internal revenue. In view of the ordinary and extraordinary expenses of the Government a reduction of $75,000,000 is about as much as it would be safe to make, experimentally.

GERMANY is "again" American pork, and Prince Bismarck has promulgated a royal decree protecting the home hog against Yankee competition. We call on the porcine prince of Santa Ana to bristle up and resent this high-handed measure of the pork-fed representative of an effete monarchy.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

A Scathing Review of the Political Life of the Ex-Vice-President of the Confederacy.

Alexander H. Stephens has been a political Lazarus. The Union killed him and the magnanimity of the republic raised him from the dead. He had patriotic instincts and sectional cowardice. He never possessed the moral courage to fight his surroundings. If he had been born in the North he would have been an intense Unionist. His Georgia associations made him a deprecating secessionist. He wanted to do right, but was afraid to. When the war first broke out he raised his voice against the secessionists. He was a Unionist. Numbers conquered reason, and he went with them. Geography had more to do with it than judgment. He acquiesced in the insanity of rebellion. A constitutional lawyer of unusual ability, he defended an attack upon the constitution. An American with mellow ideas of nationality, he sacrificed everything to sectionalism. A citizen of a republic, he fed his passions as fuel to slavery. When he was elected governor of Georgia, his election was a vindication of the republic and a condemnation of humanity. Under such conditions he would have been great. We have no desire to be bitter, but when a man knows better and does not show the manly assertion of knowledge he deserves no praise and little pity. A clean life and a Christian life do not palliate a stab at the heart of the Union. Alexander H. Stephens knew better. He knew that he was a traitor when he stultified himself and supported the treason which he had but a short time before denounced. With eyes open and a head clear, he sought to destroy the republic. A moral coward, he became a traitor because the local atmosphere was full of treason. Wrong was rampant, and he went with it, knowing it was wrong.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

In his case there was no excuse, because sophistry could not reach him. He went into a tropical movement with an arctic mind. He had an intellect as severe as the wire-grass of Georgia. He was as logical as fate. The scales were never before his eyes, and he never had the warmth to color wrong into enthusiasm. He was deliberately mistaken. He played a game of chess in which the safety of the republic was the stake, and he never missed a move nor lost a point. Since his return to public life many kindly things have been said of him. Of the man they could be said. Of the citizen they could not be said. Of the man they could be said. Of the citizen they could not be said. Of the man they could be said. Of the citizen they could not be said.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Since the war has been "reconstructed." In other words, fate has forced him back to reason. He has given an occasional admission that the Union was good for something after all, and has claimed considerable consideration because he approved of the government which failed in its duty when it did not hang him. Of the floor of the house he was a useful member because he had brains enough to make him useful. He has been progressive because he was part of his life policy to recognize a situation and take advantage of it. He always knew his atmosphere, and thus kept his head above troubled waters. He had the instinct of anticipation, and this helped him along. A political Joseph France, he indulged in "sentiment." Had he belonged to the old regime in France he would have been one of the first to knock at Napoleon's court for admission. He had presence of mind enough to fawn gracefully. He was actor enough to be a dignified traitor. He was logical enough to be a smart coward. He was quick enough to become a brand snatched from the burning. With one foot in the grave, the other always touched the future. He could do the egg dance very artistically.

In the late confederacy there were a great many private soldiers. They had a false inspiration, and they acted on it. The majority of them fought plumbly to the bitter end. They had a confused idea of an invasion and a definite idea of a defense. They went from hills and fields and homes, marched around the circle, and came back to find desolation where they had left peace and plenty. Any one of these men was a stronger figure than Alexander H. Stephens. Deliberately, and with a full knowledge, he became a part of the most criminal rebellion the world has ever known. With calculation he became a part of a gigantic tragedy. Against his rebellion and without a quickening of blood, he encouraged and assisted in the horrors of war. With conscience and with knowledge he sought to perpetuate an error of murder. An American, he strove to destroy his country. He is dead now, and it is customary to speak kindly of the dead. But we cannot speak kindly of him. He knew better than he did, he knew his weakness as well as others, but he called it obedience to the will of the majority."

This is the point exactly. It was this spirit and this weakness that made Mr. Stephens say in his speech against secession, delivered before the Legislature of Georgia on the 14th of November, 1860—before any State had seceded—

"Should Georgia determine to go

Opposition to the Game Law—A Strong Duck

Hunt—Oregon Will Follow

Small Hunt.

Going a-Trotting.

Through winding paths, through mossy woods.

Our merry band goes trotting.

Far in the woods, far from dry roads.

Our horses' hoofs clatter.

To work and roll and we go.

The tall trees over us sway.

But hush! we tread them down below!

A trout at our line is playing.

Hurray! we have him! softly now!

Be careful, now! he's a beauty!

By Jove! a fine one! Well, I say!

It took work to command him.

So all day long we wend our way.

By hand and rook and lodge.

Now again the line is played.

Between the reeds and sedges.

But now, at last, the sun declines.

And backward we go stamping.

With the trout and reeds and lines.

Back to our place of camping.

Ah! who shall tell how sweet our meal!

How peaceful the low slumber!

The many beautiful fish we've seen.

Our every care is o'ercome.

Come, then, and share our nature's charms.

Spend one short week in trotting.

Till you have had your fill of trout.

And bring your friends along too!

Opposed to the Law.

In order to show the spirit in which the game law is viewed in different parts of the State, we publish the following from the Sierra Valley Leader:

"The Legislature did a very foolish act when it amended the game law by making the close season for quail, grouse, etc., extend from March 1st to October 1st. It really amounts to a prohibition against the killing of quail

in the higher points of the State.

This is apparent when it is considered that by October 1st there are generally no quail hereabouts, they by that time having been driven to their winter quarters below. However, as it is unlikely that the sportsmen in this vicinity will observe the law, it is not necessary to predict fearful results to arise from the operation. We object, however, to the California Sportsmen's Association ruling the game of the State. The law may be all right for the lower and coast counties, but it won't do for the Sierra Nevada

Mountains, and in this connection permit us to remark that the absurdity of the Legislature in passing a uniform law for the protection of fish and game

equally in all portions of the State, must be apparent. A further illustration of this is the supposed protection to fish, afforded in making the close season for them from November

1st to April 1st, during the usual spawning season. As many of the trout of the mountains spawn in June, the protection (3) amounts to a license to kill them when they should be protected. There are scarcely two counties in the State that require the same protective measures, and the Boards of Supervisors of the various counties, being better acquainted with the wishes of the people, should have the sole power to regulate the fish and game law."
